

During the past 11 months I have enjoyed the fact that telemarketers have been limited on contact with me. The Indiana Law works extremely well in killing needless and unwanted communication to me. I cannot help but think that what the FCC has in interest is not the common citizen but moreover the interest of the lobbies. Lowering the standard for a federal law will not gain anything but more controversy. With the concept to keep government at a smaller state as the current administration would have us believe, this move on the FCC's part would not promote it. Two points of interest come to mind: "If it isn't broke, don't fix it" and "Either you are part of the problem or you are part of the solution". Seeing as how the law solved our problem, it doesn't require fixing. Leave the Indiana Law intact.
